Cedric Hermans

Haemophilia care is evolving rapidly, with new approaches to prophylaxis, the launch of several new long-acting haemophilia factor agents and subcutaneous agents, and the potential of gene therapies on the horizon. This symposium offers a unique opportunity to discuss key considerations for these therapies, including implications for haemophilia treatment centres and the management of their patients. Our multidisciplinary faculty will discuss these complex issues and share their experiences and insights on Thinking Differently to advance the care of haemophilia patients.
